NEW INDUSTRY FOR MISSION

(From Fraser Valley Record)

A new industry will shortly be in operation in Mission City, and one which will in every reapect be unique and will mark an important development in the activities of the Kootenay Jam Company, Limited.

The Company realizing that Jam making, and kindred lines, occupy but a comparative-breif period of the year, decided to enlarge the scope of their business, and with this in view organized a department which is a departure along new paths.

This Industry will consist of a plant for the manufacture of pure Cocoa and Chocolate, and will be ready and in full operation within a few weeks from this date, upon the arrival of the machinery which is now on order.

The plant, which will be the only one of its kind in Western Canada, will comprise the finest and most up-to-date machines that it is possible to obtain, and will present many features of great interest to admirers of high-class machinery. It is being made specially to the order of the Company in Europe, and the shipment alone will amount to about three carloads. For its accommodation the Company is having a large addition built to the present factory, which is now nearing completion, and will be in readiness to receive the plant on arrival.

The chief apartment of this addition is a large machinery hall, which will house the principal machines, and which is a fine; light apartment sixty feet long by thirty feet wide by twelve feet high; entirely free from obstructions in the way of columns, etc. and the floor of which will be of cement. There are also several other rooms to accommodate the different machines and departments, and altogether, the new portion of the building is of a capacious and convenient design When completed the factory will cover a large area; the total length being over two hundred and thirty feet, by eighty feet in width at the widest portion.

With the facilities which such a plant will afford, the Company will be in a position to turn out the highest grades of Cocoa and Chocolate, which will be manufactured from the finest beans which are to be imported direct; and all other raw materials will likewise be the best obtainable, and the greatest care will be exercised in their selection and preparation.

By the introduction therefore, of such a line of manufacture, the Company is the pioneer in Western Canada, as all such goods have hitherto had to be imported, or brought in from the extreme east but upon commencement of operations of this plant, it will not be necessary to go so far afield for these favorite products, as they will be manufactured right here in Mission City, and distributed from thence not only, through out the Dominion but also to Australasia, the Orcient, etc. as the Company is taking steps to be

ST. MATTTHEW'S WOMEN'S AUXILIARY, ABBOTSFORD.

The Woman's Auxiliary of St. Matthews church will hold their annual bazaar on Thursday November 30th in the Maple Leaf Hall

The succes with which the sale of work met last year has given the members of the Auxiliary great encouragement and they hope this year to have a much larger assortment of pretty and useful Xmas gifts.

In charge of the Fancy Work table are Mrs. King, Mrs. Victor Harrop and Mrs. Alanson; the Plain Sewing table Miss Steade and Mrs. Parton; the Home Cooking Mrs. Bousfield and Miss Alice Steed the Candy Table Mrs. (Dr.) Swift Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. A. Harrop; the Art and Doll Table Mrs. J. F Boyd, Mrs. W. Campbell and Mrs.

Tea will be served all afternoon and in the evening; cake coffee and ice-cream. Mrs. C. Sumner and Miss Hill-Tout will have charge of these tables. Watch the next issue of this paper for further particulars of this Bazaar.

ABBOTSFORD DEFEATED

Last Saturday the Abbotsford team was defeated by the Langley team on the latter's grounds by four to nothing. The game was a hot one and both teams did good hard work.

This Saturday the teams meet on Abbotsford's grounds.

Oh, You Cup!

A SUCCESSFUL DANCE

The dance given in the Maple Leaf Hall on Thursday evening by the football club was a grand success. There were about seventy-five couples present who enjoyed the evening's dance until the early morning hours. The music was furnished by the Oppenshaw orchestra, who are becoming very popular in Abbotsford.

THE B. C. L. A.

B C. L. A. stands for the society recently organized in Victoria for the purpose of securing the passage of a modern Public Libraries Act which will provide for the establishment of Library Boards in any part of the province, whether organized municipalities or unorganized districts; to give authority to municipalities to levy a rate for library purposes; to make provision for a provincial grant in proportion to the amount raised locally; to provide for the organization, inspection and assistance of Public Libraries in the Province by an officer or officers appointed by the Government; to provide for the training of librarians.

The Hon-President of the Association is Dr. Young; President R. W. Douglas the public librarian Vancouver; Secretary C. W. Whyte Y. M. C. A. Building, Victoria; Treasurer, Miss Helen G. Stewart the public library, Victoria.

Membership throughout the province is solicited.

BE A BOOSTER.

NEW SETTLERS COMING IN

There are a number of new settlers coming into this district now The new settlers purchase small holdings of five and ten acre lots close to the tram line.

This is just the beginning of what may be expected; that the tram line between here and New Westminster will be lined on each side by people each having a five or a ten acre plot, raising produce for the city, the car line affording such a splendid means of shipment.

ANOTHER NEW STORE

On the first of the month Mr. G [illegible] his new store with a full line of boots and shoes and gent's furnishings, he having purchased one of the finest stock along this line it is possible to buy. Being well known throughout the district he should do well.

In this connection it might be mentioned that Abbotsford affords a fine opening for a department store carrying a line of goods that would attract the people in this district and keep them from going to New Westminster, Vancouver and Sumas.

Mr. Clark may later extend his business along such lines, when he gets right down to good hard and [illegible] work.

B. J. GERNAEY GETS BIGGER

Mr. B. J. Gernacy has increased the size of his store. The room formerly used as a work-shop has been added to the show room and the workshop moved further back. He has now as fine a little business establishment as is to be found anywhere in the Fraser Valley.

DIED AT NEW WESTMINSTER

Minnie the little five year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Waite died at New Westminster on Tuesday evening last of dipbtheria The little girl with her parents resided for a short time in Abbotsford this year where she was a favorite. She being the only child the parents will feel all the more their loss and will have the deeper sympathy of those who know them.

THE VALUE OF SMALL SAVINGS

If a young man fifteen years of age were determined to save three car fares each week, and to pay the fifteen cents thus saved every week until he was sixty to the Canadian government for the purchase of an Annuity, the result of his thrift would be that from and after sixty he would receive $25.18 every three months so long as he lived. If he died before he was 60 all that he paid in, with three per cent compound interest would be refunded to his heirs, and if he died just before his first instalment of interest fell due his heirs would inherit $171.70. A postcard sent to the Superintendent of Canadian Government annuities, Ottawa giving age last birthday, will secure information as to what an Annuity will cost.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1911

The Liberals these days seem to be much worried about the array of ability which the premier of our Dominion has gathered around him. We hear them say "wait a while and we shall see the result". No man ever worked himself up to a high position of premier of Canada who had not ability to surround himself with men who were able to assist him govern the country. It would be hard for any true Canadian no matter what his politics were to have to acknowledge such a state of affairs. The Liberals compare the men in Borden's cabinet with the Laurier cabinet of 1896, much to the detriment of the present ministry, seemingly. Borden is undoubtedly master in his own house, and has called to his aid men who are willing to follow his lead. He led the Conservatives to victory; surely he can lead his party to successful government. The people of Canada have entrusted him with the work at any rate and not even the Liberals should find fault, unless party blind. No general ever led his army to victory on the battlefield unless he had his army under perfect control and won. But some times a premier meets the sad fate of a man been when he attempts to have as his advisers a nest of traitors, who would give ps su uou ao Aeaa Aiunos' advisers whom he cannot control. It was the clever man unwilling to be led that defeated Laurier at the polls last month. Undoubtedly Laurier surrounded himself with some of the cleverest men that it has been the privilege of any premier of Canada to have, but these clever men have not always been willing to be led—the breaking away has at times been painful and hard to explain. A house divided divided against itself cannot stand has been repeated many thousand times, and will in the future be said as many times, and demonstrated as many thousand times more. We know very little about some of the Borden cabinet, but the fact that they have been called to assist their leader should be a guarantee that they are considered successful men along special lines. Read the daily papers. Take the individual men of the cabinet, study their history before making rash proclamations of weakness. But then the Liberals should not make too much noise about it, even if they firmly believe that the present ministry is not of as strong cabinet material as was given to the country in '96, as if such be the case the time of waiting won't be far away, and the time of probation would be very much shorter. There is nothing fears a fairly good man to greater success than to show him that you do not believe in him, especially if there is ability there. Of course we all take for granted that Borden will have to go some if he gives the country as good government as did his predecessor—but like all good men there is a pitfall.

And so we are told that the present Superintendent of Education is to be at the head of the new B. C. University. A worse choice might be made, and possibly a better choice might not be made. But in giving a B. C. man an opportunity to make good we believe the provincial government is doing the right thing. Superintendent Robinson made good as principal of the Vancouver High School. He has made good as Superintendent of Education, of course there are always kickers. And, the editor of this paper, knowing Mr. Robinson personally, believes that if appointed as the official head of the new university, he will make good a third time. It is generally conceded that Dr. Robinson is responsible for the present system of our schools. Now while the system is by no means perfect it is a decided improvement on the old system and is being gradually improved upon each year. It is often said that a man is of no account unless his friends severely criticise him; might the same not be applied to a system? Nothing was ever invented or ever thought out but some one came forward with an improvement. Dr. Young has the consent of this paper to appoint the present Superintendent as official head of the new university. Thus the world rolls on.

THE MARKET.

Bright sunshine and balmy weather served to draw the largest crowd that the local market has seen in many a day. Coincident with the large crowd of shoppers was a correspondingly large number of salesmen and saleswomen on the market place. Vegetable offerings at retail were large and varied and the thrifty housewife had no trouble in getting what she sought on the market. There was but little change in the prices for the buyers were equal to the supply and there was a unnoticeable absence of the usual selling out of depleted stocks at whatever price was obtainable.

But little wholesale beef was on the market, though offerings of veal and mutton were numerous, at unchanged prices. Retail meat offerings were as numerous as usual but the only change in prices noted was a decline in mutton.

There was little fruit offered, and it soon sold at relatively lower prices than heretofore. Eggs and butter showed no change of moment and the only new offering on the fish market was sea trout each of which weighed three lbs. or more and sold at 20 cents per pound.

Vegetables at wholesale were numerous and the prices showed a slight decline, the buyers being few.

The poultry market was well up to the standard and a lot of birds changed hands. Ducks were plentiful and the price was a little weaker than last week. A few ducks sold as high as $15 per doz. A small number of turkeys were offered and these were sold at 35c per pound live weight of few good birds of the Plymouth Rock variety were offered at $12 per dozen. As the owner would not let them go at less they were taken home.

There was a considerable amount of American poultry on the market and the Chilliwack train also brought in a number of crates. Altogether the market was of a satisfactory character and conditions seem to be rallying after the past season's turmoil, the harvesting operations which kept the farmers from the market.

The following were the quotations;

EGG LAYING CONTEST NOW ON

An egg laying contest is being carried on in Vancouver at the present time which is in conjunction with the Vancouver Exhibition Board. There are hens from all parts of the province and Australia and New Zealand. Upwards of forty pens are entered and it is safe to say there is more crowing and cackling in those forty pens than any other space the same size in the province.

CANADA POWER COMPANY BUYS IN MISSION CITY

(From Fraser Valley Record)

The Western Canada Power Company have purchased the Glenbrook Creamery from M. DesBrisay & Company, and will use the building as a sub-station and office for Mission City. The figure paid is not public.

The Glenbrook Creamery was completed in 1907 and run for two years, and although a superior article was placed on the market it was decided to close out the business, since which time the building has remained practically idle.

The main part of the building is 32x35 and built of stone; the rear addition is 18x40 and of frame.

The Western Canada Power Company are having the inside of the building overhauled and intend to could be put to further good use and for their local office.

The Shadow

It Was an Important Matter In a Man's Life

By Manuel Cosio

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

I was sitting in a wine shop in Naples. It was a dingy place, and no one was in the place except myself, though in a back room was a woman, who kept the shop. I was dressed in rags. Twilight had nearly died away, and the room in which I sat was lighted only by a lamp in the adjoining room. But it was sufficient to cast a shadow. My back was toward it, and I saw on the wall before me the shadow of a figure advancing with a raised arm. My blood ran cold, for I knew some one was behind me who intended to murder me.

This is how it came about:

I belong to the Italian national police, or the carabineers. We are a very different body from the municipal police I assure you. We are selected from the better classes, and it is quite difficult to enter the corps.

One day I was called to headquarters and asked if I would volunteer for duty in getting evidence in a murder case. It was not a matter that I could be ordered upon, because it was necessary for me to spy upon the celebrated Camorra society, possibly to become a member of it in order to secure the evidence I needed. I consented to undertake the work and was supplied with what means I needed temporarily and assured that any draft of mine would be honored.

My field of operations was Naples and its vicinity. The Neapolitans have been more tyrannized over than any other body of Italians; consequently there are more poverty, misery and crime among them than any other Italian people. An American lady had been walking on the sea wall promenade when dusk was coming on and there were few people about. She was found murdered, several valuable finger rings and what money she had having been taken. The murderer was probably a member of the Camorra, and it was my object to discover and convict him.

The only information I could get to old me was that the American lady had about 400 lire ($80) on her person, and a description of the finger rings. There were a solitaire diamond and a sapphire, and one setting included three stones—a ruby between two emeralds.

Having been enlisted at Milan, I was not known at Naples. I appeared there one morning dressed in dirty rags and began operations on the street as a professional beggar. It was a unique position for one who had behind him the treasury of the kingdom of Italy. I pass over a month that I spent either in begging or poking trinkets to sell under the noses of tourists. Meanwhile I was forming acquaintances among the worst element of Naples. One only among the men I met interested me. He appeared to be of the better class. He gave me a tip for some petty service I insisted on doing him, looked into my face and said to me:

"You are too intelligent looking to wear such clothes. You should be in better condition."

"Oh, we poor people have no opportunity to better ourselves!" I replied.

"You are right. The rich absorb everything. The laws protect them in their iniquities. But the poor man—he must be a slave. However, there are ways for a bright looking fellow like you to make money."

The result of this meeting was that I went to the rooms of this man Genazzini to learn how to make money. It was by assisting him to get his hands on other people's property. When I spoke of being detected and obliged to go to jail he told me that I need not fear that; he was in with the police and would protect me. I did not at the time ask him for further information as to his means of protection, for I suspected that I had found a member of the Camorra. I became his assistant in a number of thefts. He worked up the cases, so to speak, and I did the pilfering. In every case the person robbed received compensation from the chief of police, stating that it was not their policy to prosecute the thief. In one instance I contrived to get caught in the act in order to learn of the protection that would follow. The man I robbed ordered my arrest and was very boastful as to the punishment that would be meted out to me, but when he confronted me in court failed to identify me. He dared not do so.

This satisfied me that Genazzini was a member of the Camorra, but I pretended not to know that such a society existed. He had lost his thumb and forefinger in some accident or fracas and told me that that was the reason he would do no stealing himself. He would always be liable to be identified by his missing digits.

When I entered his service he gave me better clothes and I displayed sufficient intelligence for him to manifest a friendship for me. I asked him one day if he knew anything about the murder of the American lady. He made no reply, but I had my eye fixed on his when I asked the question, and practice had made me very expert in getting unintentional replies from the human eye. I was sure that he knew all about the case I referred to.

I was getting on very slowly, but it seemed to me that I was making progress. To hurry might lead to a mistake, and a mistake would not only end my investigations, but my life. I was in constant dread of meeting some friend or acquaintance who would recognize me. To prevent this I told Genazzini that since I was liable to be recognized by those from whom I had stolen, I would better make myself up. He assented to this, but I found the plan impracticable. A makeup can't be used in close proximity with persons, for they will soon discover it.

Well, one day what I feared happened. I was in a restaurant getting instructions in the matter of a robbery Genazzini was planning. He had gone to the cashier's desk to pay the bill for some refreshments, when in came Giovanni Conti, one of my Milan friends. He was fashionably dressed and, to my horror, saw me and came toward me with outstretched hand. Genazzini was passing out at the time. I saw him look at my meeting with Conti, but without appearing to take any especial interest in it. I pledged my friend not on his life to mention me to any one and got away from him as soon as I could.

I confess that on meeting my employer again I dreaded to see some indication of an awakened suspicion, but he did not refer to having seen me addressed by a gentleman or seem to have remembered it. I breathed easier. He said his last pilfering necessitated my putting on the same kind of dress I had worn when he first met me. Before leaving me he directed me to meet him at a wine shop near the railway station and, in beggars' apparel, I was to go there about 6 in the evening and wait for him till he came. We would then go to commit the robbery.

This brings me to the wineshop looking at the shadow of a figure advancing to murder me. One second was sufficient to tell me that the figure was a man and that man was Genazzini. I would not have known it but for the shadow of his hand. The shadow showed only three fingers, the thumb and forefinger being absent.

But this was not all that flashed upon my mind, though what I thought was inferred. On leaving the restaurant he had gone to some place where, unobserved himself, he had seen me talking with my friend Conti and must have known from my expression and my manner that I had received a shock and was directing Conti not to publicly recognize me again. Since then Genazzini had doubtless put the machinery of the Camorra to work to ascertain who I was. He must have been successful in at least learning I was a spy if not a carabineer. It was necessary that I die before I could do any more harm, and possibly the secrets I had learned might die with me. The shop was doubtless under the control of the Camorra. The only person besides myself in it was the woman who kept it, and she was not likely to give evidence against the murderer. A stiletto would be used, since it made no noise.

This is a great deal to go through one's mind while another is advancing from behind to stab him, but to me, who seemed to be doomed, there was plenty of time, as I have said, within a second.

And I would have been doomed. I would never have told this story had it not been for the advantage of the shadow cast on the wall. And even this would not have saved me had it not been that in the raised shadowed hand I recognized by the missing thumb and forefinger the maimed fist of Genazzini.

Having known that my life was every minute in danger, I, of course, went armed and invented contrivances to enable me to use my weapons quickly. On my back, under my coat, was a stiletto, the favorite weapon in western America some sixty or seventy years ago. In both sleeves I carried a self cocking Derringer pistol suspended on a rubber strap. The pistol hung just above my wrist, and by a quick fling of my arm I could stretch the rubber so as to enable me to grasp the weapon.

All this would have been useless had I not seen the shadow and identified it by the missing thumb and finger, for I would have been crushed under the murderous weight while his stiletto let the life out of me. As it was, I rose, gave my arm a flirt, and as my enemy's hand came down on my shoulder and the stiletto toward my throat I put a ball through one of his eyes, at the same time dodging his blow. He fell on the floor, and with one jump I reached the door and never stopped till I reached a policeman.

But all I wanted of him was assistance in case there were any members of the Camorra near to take part against me. As soon as I was satisfied in this respect I left him and went to the headquarters of my corps and reported the tragedy.

My chief declared that if I valued my life I would better change my field of operations. But I argued that Genazzini was either dead or would die, and, being a very secretive man, he had not told any one of his connection with me, or, at least, that I knew anything about the Camorra. I was therefore desirous of finishing my work. But those above me decided otherwise. I was ordered to Padua, which is about as far from Naples as any place within the limits of Italy, and there I was obliged to go. I had picked up one or two clews, however, which I gave to my successor, who began where I left off, and at last advices I learned that he had discovered who had committed the murder of the American lady and was working on securing evidence to bring about a conviction.

SPORT AND PASTIME.

A junior football league has been formed this year comprising Mission, Matsqui, Abbotsford and Mt. Lehman.

The first game was played on Abbotsford and won 1-0 The game October 11th between Matsqui and Mt Lehman, resulting in a win for the former team by 5 goals to 2 Last Saturday Mission played Abbotsford at eleven o'clock. Mission took the ball into Abbotsford ground and kept it there for the first fifteen minutes at the end of which time A. Harry of Mission scored with a bounding shot which Boyd misjudged. This was the only score of the game. For the rest of the time the game was played in the centre of the field neither forward line being able to cope with the opposite defence. At the same time Mission should have had four or five goals at least but for poor shooting. Taylor made some goal stops in goal for Mission while Fuzino, Harry and Catchpole were the best of the field. For Abbotsford L. Tretheway was far and away the best while McPhee and Boyd showed up well. One feature of the game was the entire absence of fouls, referee Heath having a very easy job.

Mission team—Goal W. Taylor; Backs, Stokes and Kramer; Halves, Taylor, Gibbard and Fuzino Forwards, Cox, Northcote Harry, Manson, Catchpole.

Mission will play Matsqui on the exhibition grounds Saturday Oct 28th at 2 p.m.—Com.

THE B. C. POTATO EXHIBIT

Messrs Asahel Smith and C. Stuart-Wade passed through Mission City on Monday evening on their way to New York with the B. C. Potato exhibit.

In conversation with both gentlemen this paper was informed that a very fine exhibit had been secured and that there were over two hundred varieties, gathered from all parts of the province.

The question was asked what was to be done with the exhibit after the competition was over, and the answer came that "sell it to the highest bidder."

The cost of gathering this exhibit has no doubt cost the province considerable money, and even if the medal is won, the exhibit use it as a transforming station in advertising the province, but not by selling it to the highest bidder, but by the province having it sent to the Agent-General's office in London, England. Here it could remain for another six months, and attract the attention of all who visit that office during the coming winter months. In this way the province would be it is believed be fully recompensed and "Love's Labor" not "Lost" on the part of the promoters.

Did you see how nicely Mr. Gernacy has his windows cleaned since last week.

represented abroad, and is making preparations to conduct a large export trade.

By the establishment of such a branch, the Company will also be enabled to keep the factory fully occupied the whole of the year, thus retain and make use of the services of their staff, without interruption, which, as will be readily understood, is a much desired condition.

The Company is arranging for the new branch to be in full running order early in the New Year as all the preliminaries will be completed, and everything in readiness pending the arrival of the machinery, of which it is understood the company has received late advices in regard to its early shipment.
